They have been known to turn a blind eye, looking the other way. This gets to the heart of the problem. Crime has been fueled by the failed war on drugs. It has been exacerbated by the failed war on gangs. Both were launched decades ago, when illegality was a constant reality. The recent war on drugs/gang crime nonsense started in 2003, when the war began. Nothing has been resolved and it has been a complete and total failure. And yet we fight on. Some would have it that progress is being made as it is clear that our hard work is paying off. The truth is that the failed war on drugs/gang crime is seen as proof of progress. We have nothing to show for it except for more deaths, more violence, more lies and more government interference. And not only are more deaths, violence, lies and government interference justified by the claims of success, there are more lies. It is time we had a reality check. Let us not fool ourselves: guns will continue to kill people, until the day they are not allowed to be carried.

Until that day, more innocent people will die. And until that day, our efforts will be going in the wrong direction. We have no more freedom to enact our laws than we did in the past. Some of our ancestors have no freedom to enact their laws and, I believe, would not want any of us to have that freedom. We have nothing to show for their work. It is time we do the hard work of solving a problem. Until that time, we are going to keep getting killed, innocent people are going to continue dying and we are going to continue to inflict damage on ourselves. There has to be a way forward. There has to be a way to end the carnage. There has to be a way to bring this problem back to the front burner. There has to be a way to get serious about the problem. We have a problem. Let us put our heads together and fix the problem. Until we do, more innocent people are going to die and we are going to keep inflicting damage on ourselves. 1: The deadliest year since 2002, with 60 people killed from Friday to Sunday, down from a peak of 121 in 2003. 2: Since 2003 there have been 149 mass shootings. 3: In 2013, the number of gang killings increased by 20 percent, to 182, which, according to an Associated Press analysis of figures published by 82157476af
